The damage caused by the shells which were pumped into Lille by the German siege gans at such a rapid rate that they could scarcely be counted, may be gleaned from this photo, taken during the hottest of the bombardment. The walls of one of the houses which was struck are seen toppling into the street. People in the vicinity at the time, who were fleeing from one shelter to another, are seen dodging the rain of brick, stone and plaster falling all about them. In the tackground may be seen rising the smoke from a building which
